Jeremy Leigh was born into a working-class family in the foothills of North Carolina. He had a very troubled childhood. Seeking peace from his abusive father and his depressed mother, he enjoyed being alone. He spent many days and nights walking through the heavily wooded trails of the mountains near his home. He learned to love and appreciate being in nature.

Jeremy was a brilliant boy. He did well in school but soon found out that his real passion was the wilderness. Nature was the only place he felt really safe. During the summer months he would spend weeks traveling alone through the mountain trails.

One dark, starry night he lay under the tall oak trees and all was quiet. He heard a deep, hushed whispering. He lay perfectly motionless and listened to the voices around him. The noises were coming from the trees, the grasses, the winds and the rocks. They were whispering the secrets of nature to him. He knew they were giving him an incredible responsibility. He was to communicate their messages to the outside world. He listened and understood their messages. Now he waits for the appropriate time when people, the children, will be ready to hear these words.
